September 23rd brings Autumn to those of us in the Northern Hemisphere, beginning with the autumnal equinox at 1:37 a.m. Eastern Daylight Time. If you're looking to escape the chilly weather, head south of the equator to the Southern Hemisphere, where the same date will be the first day of spring. Why are there opposite seasons in the two regions? For an explanation, take a look at the CCC! Streaming Media video Why We Have Seasons.

The vibrant colors of Fall are just around the corner...

Remembering 25

Recent historians have come to regard William McKinley, America's 25th President, as the President who paved the way for America to become a world power. McKinley was an innovator of U.S. interventionism. In 1898, a 100-day war gaining three new territories: Puerto Rico, Guam and the Philippines. That same year, McKinley signed a resolution annexing Hawaii, and in 1900, he sent American soldiers to rescue missionaries threatened with death during the Boxer Rebellion in China, despite the reservations of Congressional Democrats who objected to his dispatching troops without consulting the legislature. In 1901, McKinley was elected to a second term, but just six months after it began, on September 14, 1901, his life was ended by an assassin. Your students can get an overview of McKinley's achievements in "Cleveland, McKinley & Theodore Roosevelt," part of the series Our Presidents in America's History, available in CCC! 155 Years Ago - America's Bloodiest Battle

William McKinley was the last U.S. President to have fought in the Civil War. On September 17, 1862, his regiment, the 23rd Ohio, was among the Union troops that engaged General Robert E. Lee's Confederate soldiers in the Battle of Antietam. McKinley came under heavy fire bringing rations to men on the line, but he was one of the lucky few to survive. By day's end, General George B. McClellan's Union Army had routed the Confederates, but over 26,000 combatants were missing, wounded, or dead; it remains the bloodiest day of fighting in U.S. military history. CCC! Streaming Media's series Talking Maps explains the battle using maps and live-action recreations to give students a deeper understanding of the geography of the Civil War.
